INTRODUCTION.

THE marriage of Margaret,* daughter of King Edward the First, with John the son of the Duke of Brabant, to whom the following document relates, was an affair of as grave political consideration to the parents of both the future bride and bridegroom as any matrimonial arrangement of later times. On the part of the King of England the union afforded a prospect of materially strengthening his continental possessions, by a close alliance with one of the most powerful of the great Barons of Germany,—one, whose successful wars with his neighbours had won him the title of “the Victorious;” and on the part of the Duke himself, a family connexion with a sovereign so renowned as King Edward, must have been an object of desire even before so considerable a sum as 50,000*l.* was settled for the bride’s portion.

Probably other reasons presented themselves to the contracting parties, as it seems to have been settled that some such alliance should at all events be completed. The agreement,† which was the

* She was born at Windsor, 11th September, 1275. For a most interesting account of the daughters of Edward I. see the “Lives of the Princesses of England” by Mrs. Green. That of the Princess Margaret begins at vol. ii. p. 363. In this work the valuable public records of the period have for the first time been turned to good account for biographical purposes, and the result has been a delightful and veracious work. Several of the following remarks are indebted to its pages; but, the object now being to trace the prince rather than the princess, the original documents which are quoted have been consulted (except in the case of the Fœdera), and the extracts are translated from them. *

† Fœdera, vol. i. part 2, p. 550. The covenants in the contract for the marriage of John son of the Count of Holland with the Princess Elizabeth were similar. In that first of the kind entered into by Edward, was not that John of Brabant should marry Margaret, the daughter of King Edward, but that John, or (in case of his death) some other son of the Duke of Brabant, should marry Margaret or (in case of her death) some other daughter of the King of England;—that a son of the one should marry a daughter of the other. This contract was entered into in the year 1278, before the princess was yet three years old. The amount of her portion has been mentioned: her dower was to consist of lands to the yearly value of 3,000*l.*, to be increased to 4,000*l.* after the decease of her father-in-law. But before that event had happened their value was raised to 6,000*l.* yearly rents. By the appointment of procurators in the next year to conclude all the arrangements necessary for the marriage, it is evident that the princess's father anxiously desired the union.

In the year 1284 the bridegroom expectant, accompanied by a considerable suite, paid a visit to the Court of his future father-in-law. His stay was short, but may be supposed to have been mutually satisfactory,† as early in the following year the Duke of Brabant sent his son (then 15 years of age) to reside in England. During the interval that occurred before the performance of the marriage, the young prince was completely installed as a member of the Royal Family of England. He was numerously attended by valets, squires, and servants, and had at his command a stud of from 25 to 35 horses, the number, of course, varying with the journeys to be performed.

case, too, the same determination for an alliance existed, for the Count's daughter had been pledged to the King's eldest son Alfonso, who had died.

* See a letter of the prince to King Edward after this visit. It is given from the Tower Records in Mrs. Green's work, ii. p. 367.

The accounts of the expenses of this retinue were regularly entered among those of the royal establishments; and, were it not for the sadly incomplete state of those documents, there would be little difficulty in following the prince in his wanderings about the country, and, with the additional help of such Rolls as that which follows these remarks, in judging how the greater portion of his time was occupied.

During three years of the time spent by the prince in England, the King was abroad. His absence was owing to the state of his affairs upon the continent, and also to the disputes between the Kings of France and Aragon. Connected as he was with both those sovereigns, it was no easy task to compose their differences upon the Sicilian question; and the betrothal and marriage (by proxy) of Edward's eldest daughter Eleanor to the heir apparent of the crown of Aragon increased the difficulties.* Edward also interested himself in peaceably arranging the disputes of the Duke of Brabant with some of his neighbours, and paid him the whole of the portion of his son's future wife four years before the ceremony took place which gave the Duke a title to it. While the King was absent from England, it is well known that the Judges and other officers grossly abused their trust by their exactions upon the people. During his stay in England, John of Brabant occasionally resided with the King, and sometimes with the Prince of Wales—who, young as he then was, had an establishment distinct from that of the King; but the greater part of the young bridegroom's time was passed at various royal residences scattered over the country at which the Court was not staying at the time, and where, surrounded by companions of kindred tastes, he indulged in those sports of the field and chivalry in which his father was so famous.

The Royal Wardrobe Account for the year in which the nuptials of John of Brabant and the Princess Margaret were solemnised is fortunately preserved, and from it may be gathered a very minute account of the preparations for the ceremony. The four months preceding the marriage were passed by Prince John in a visit to the King's mother at Ambresbury, in going to a tournament at Winchester, and with hunting parties at Kennington, and at Havering at Bower. His expenses entered upon the Royal Account from the 12th March to 30th July, including money lost at chess, amounted to 271*l.* 11*s.* 6½*d.\

By those who wish to trace the details of the marriage ceremony, Mrs. Green's "Lives of the Princesses of England" should be consulted. It is only necessary here to say that the early professors of all the arts of personal ornament and decoration were busily occupied long before the eventful day. The bride's trousseau appears to have been magnificent. The illuminator (not of books, but of the palace,) had four men engaged in making candles. Nineteen minstrels were collected from various counties to do honour to the occasion, and some Gascon knights devised and procured dresses decorated according to the fashion of their own country for some of the dancers.† The ceremony was performed at Westminster on Saturday, the 8th July,

* Wardrobe Account, 18 Edw. I.

† Ibid. The passage is as follows: "Domino Guilielmo Arnoldi militi Vasconie familiaris Regis existentis, &c. per 19 dies apud London' ad ordinandum et faciendum quoynteyias in quibus ipse et socii sui trippaverunt ad foros Vasconie die festi nuptiarum Domine Margarete, pro expensis suis 54."

1290, in the presence of the Duke of Brabant himself, with the principal nobles and ladies of his province, and of the whole English Court. The young bridegroom accompanied his father to the English coast on his return homewards, but continued to reside with his bride in England. His taste for athletic pursuits—a taste which the King encouraged by annually presenting him with two falcons*—is amply shewn by the following account. At his age and in those days there can be little doubt that these sports were regarded by him less as the amusements than the business of life. Besides being strongly attached to all kinds of sports, John of Brabant, differing in this respect from his princess, is said to have had little inclination for the ceremonies of religion. After his marriage the Court had to perform a kind of penance then very usual for an act of omission—300 poor men were fed because John of Brabant and Margaret his wife did not hear mass.†

The period to which the Roll which is now printed refers is a portion of the years 1292-3. John of Brabant‡ continued his stay in England till after his accession to the Duchy on the death of his father. That event occurred earlier than in the course of nature it might have been expected, and it is said that one of the Princess Margaret's sisters was its innocent cause. Disappointed of a king for the husband of his eldest daughter Eleanor, Edward married her to Henry Earl of Barr in September, 1293. The Earl was proud of her beauty, and on inducting her to his patrimony in the spring of the following year proclaimed a tournament in her honour.

* Wardrobe Account, 18 Edw. I.

† Ibid.

‡ With the exception of this document and a household account of the Prince Edward, it seems that little light can be thrown upon the life of Prince John for that particular time. Before taking up the subject of the document in question, the subsequent history of the Prince has been glanced at.

The Duke of Brabant had seen and admired the Princess Eleanor at her father's court, and the proposed jousts gave new life to the decaying fire of his chivalrous spirit. In the hope of being crowned by her hand, he entered the lists with the strongest and boldest; and died at the Castle of Barr, of wounds received in an encounter with Sir Peter de Baufremont.

Very soon after his father's death John then Duke of Brabant was conveyed home by some merchants of his country, who came with a retinue in three ships for that purpose.

That he was probably a personal favourite of King Edward I. may be inferred from the attentions paid him on his departure, although the King's daughter was made unhappy by the marriage.

Letters of conduct and assistance* were issued on behalf of those who had arrived to escort home the new Duke, and he sailed from Harwich at the end of June, 1294. His Duchess did not accompany him; her position at her father's court had been little altered by her marriage; but she had a separate establishment after her husband's departure. And when, after three years, she joined her husband, Humfrey de Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex, whom the following Roll shews to have been a companion of Prince John in England, was sent with others to see that the Duchess was put in possession of the dower granted her by the Duke's father.†

The Duke probably made a short visit to England in the year 1295, as there is in the Chapter House a receipt, to which is appended his seal, much broken, for the sum of 4000*l.*, which the King of England had granted to him out of the customs on wools from the merchants of his country. It is dated at Westminster, on the Feast of Saint Thomas the Apostle (December 21), 1295.

It is certain that the Duke fell into profligate courses in his own country. Margaret's married life was not to be envied, but her position was doubtless improved after the birth of an heir to the Duchy, in the year 1300. Great rejoicings are said to have taken place in consequence. A valet who was sent by the Duchess to announce the good news to the members of her family had the handsome present of 190 marks; of which 100 were given by the King, 50 by the Queen, and 40 by Prince Edward.* Duke John II. was not of a warlike disposition; but he reigned vigorously, and acquired the surname of "the Peaceful,"—no easy achievement. The Duke and Duchess were present at the marriage of the Duchess's brother, then King Edward II., to Isabella of France, in 1307. The Duke died 27th October, 1312; the Duchess survived him six years. Their only issue was one son, who must have trod in the steps of his grandfather rather than his father, as his title was "the Triumphant." He was the last Duke of Brabant; his eldest daughter bequeathing the duchy to Anthony son of Philip the Bold, Duke of Burgundy.

Little is known of the early history of Thomas and Henry the sons of Edmund, younger brother of King Edward I., and first Earl of Lancaster, by his second wife Blanche daughter of Robert Earl of Artois and widow of Henry Earl of Champagne and Brie. They appear to have been the constant companions of John of Brabant during the period to which the following account relates, and, doubtless, participated in all his amusements. Both were considerably his juniors. Thomas had been contracted in marriage to Beatrice daughter of the Duke of Burgundy; but he married Alice daughter of Henry de Lacy Earl of Lincoln. He was the popular leader against the favourites of Edward II., and, on the defeat of his party, suffered an ignominious death at Pontefract, in 1322. But his memory was deeply venerated by the clergy and people, and Edward III. exerted himself to obtain admission for the name of Saint Thomas of Lancaster, by which he was called, into the duly canonized lists; but in vain. His brother Henry, the same who is mentioned in the following pages, succeeded to the vast estates and dignity of the earldom, on the reversal of his brother's attainder.

The document which is now to be introduced to notice is the account of what may be called the Privy Purse Expenses of John of Brabant from the 8th November, 1292, to the latter part of May, 1293.* From the 13th April, Thomas and Henry the two sons of Edmund, brother of King Edward, were with him, and from that date a portion of the account relates entirely to outlays for them, but they are almost wholly for small articles of apparel. The Roll affords many valuable illustrations of domestic manners and of the personal character of the Prince; and it is also the only one of the kind at present known to exist. The account was written by one of his Flemish attendants, Richard de Louthembourg, and the Prince is referred to throughout by the familiar name of "John."

When the account commenced, the Prince was at Berwick, and 7*d.* was paid for securing his chamber in the Castle against the rain. One of his chaplains was left sick for twenty-one days till * The Roll consists of four membranes, two of which (the second and fourth) are very small and are written in the ordinary hand of the period; membranes one and three are written in a decidedly foreign character.

"John" had returned to "the ladies," viz. the English Princesses at Roxburgh. It is not known whether the Princess Margaret was there; and indeed, it may be remarked as somewhat curious that there is not a single entry in the account in any way relating to the Prince's wife. Between Roxburgh, Jedburgh, and Berwick, the time was spent till after Christmas, for which festival "John's" clothes were made at Newcastle with silken thread by Henry his tailor. Two shillings were also lost at chess, and a dozen gloves bought. On the 30th December, the Scottish border was left for a tournament at Warwick. At this period a hiatus* appears to exist in the account, the next entry referring to the 1st of March, when John was with the King at Grendon (Bucks). But from the Household Account of Prince Edward we learn that on Thursday, the 12th February, "John of Brabant and the two sons of Lord Edmund came from the tournament at Dunstable with a great company; and on the Sunday following, the Lord John, after breakfast, departed towards Cambridge." On Sunday the 22nd, he returned, and left on the Tuesday following. Prince Edward was then at Langley.

He quitted Grendon to attend a tournament at Northampton (?), at the latter part of March, where two of his horses were much wounded and laid up for 20 days, costing him for attendance and articles for their cure, 15*s*. Another tournament being proclaimed at Royston in April, "John's" destriers or chargers were sent for from Dunstable. Thence he appears to have gone to Soham, near Cambridge, the ancient nursery of horse-racing, where 12*d*. were lost at bowls. He then went to Grendon, where another tournament occurred in the same month. On the 23rd April, "John" left Grendon to visit the King in London, returning to Dunstable on the 26th; so his stay must have been short, and no time lost in the journey. On the 3rd May, a visit was again paid to the King in London, and thence several visits were made to Prince Edward and the King's daughters at Mortlake. On the 7th, according to the Prince's Household Account, he dined there. On some of these occasions several sums from 4*d.* to 3*s.* were expended by his attendants for sports upon the Thames. By another portion of the account, which was obviously made up by different officers, it seems that in the middle and at the latter part of April he, or some of the household, were at Cheshunt and other places in Hertfordshire, in London, and at Dunstable. It would appear from some of the entries, that there was a tournament at the latter place, but it probably did not occur during the time comprised in the Roll. At Merston (Bucks), during the latter part of April, 6*d.* were lost at bowls. A portion of the account includes the gross household expenses for a part of the month of April, showing that an establishment was then maintained separate from the court.

* This hiatus occurs in the middle of a membrane; previous to the entry relating to 1st March. There is no gap or sign of incompleteness, the only thing to be remarked is that the ink is darker coloured.

Before the miscellaneous items of interest are referred to, the few traces of John of Brabant which are supplied by the Household Account of Prince Edward for this year may be noticed. On the 17th June, the Prince being at Kennington, the keeper of his household records that, "There came to dinner John of Brabant, with 30 horses and 24 valets at wages, and the two sons of the Lord Edmund, with 30 horses and 21 valets, and they stay at our expences in all things, in hay, oats, and wages." It is evident they were not welcome to the Prince's officers; the laconic entry of "morantur" daily records their stay for four days, when the relief their departure afforded appears by the somewhat lachrymose entry, "Adhuc morantur, et est ista dies onerosa"—because the guests, accompanied by some foreigners, were on their way to the jousts at Fulham, and a sumptuous entertainment was to be provided for them at Kingston. And by an entry on the 18th August, it appears that John of Brabant, Thomas and Henry, the King's hunters, and many foreigners, went to hunt in company with Prince Edward in Ashby Forest, and stayed with the Prince three or four days.

In the numerous entries illustrative of the athletic sports of the period the chief interest of the following Roll will be found. Not a week passes but some article is bought, or some preparation made for indulging in them. At Jedburgh, 12*d.* were lost in a shooting match, a "balista" repaired and bolts bought for it; at Berwick, the Prince's helmet and sword were furbished and fastenings bought for the armory; Stephen the falconer was sent to London for a falcon, the journey occupying 41 days. The state of the roads and mode of travelling is shown by a payment of 6*s.* for a cart and four horses for six days, travelling two days and resting four; sometimes, however, they travelled three days in a week and rested three.

When at Royston, the steward of the household wrote to the Sheriff of Norfolk about one of the Prince's lost falcons.* There are many entries relating to arms and armour purchased at London; among them may be remarked, half a deer's skin for helmet crests, and silver rings, and thongs for the basinets.† One of the Prince's falcons being lost, 36*s.* were paid to redeem it from a man who bought it from the one who found it. An account furnished by Raymond de Bourdeaux relates to the purchase of gilt spurs and other articles, and especially of saddles decorated with the arms of Guy Ferre, of Geoffrey de Brabant the Prince's brother, of Lord Edmund the King's brother, and other nobles.* When at Barnwell (Cambridge), on their way to a tournament, the Prince, accompanied by Thomas, inspected the royal stables, and gave 2*s.* to the keepers of the King's "destriers."† There are also several entries relating to horses that were hurt or required particular attendance, and ordinary expenses for arms, horse-gear, and falcons, are constantly noted.

Among the traits of personal character presented by this document may be instanced the following:—

At the tournament at Grendon the King's daughters made a gift in the Prince's presence to a poor minstrel towards buying him a gown or robe, and thereupon the prince gave him 3*s.*‡

Among the expenses in London is a payment of 2*s.* 6½*d.* "for bread, wine, and other things for a certain small dinner not ordered beforehand for the Abbot of Jumieges and Sir Daniel, who, passing over before John's house when going to the King's Court, were drawn into the said John's house."§ There are several entries of gifts to poor persons "propter Deum:" these are sometimes to pages who had fallen sick. In two cases a poor idiot man and woman are similarly relieved; || and 22*d.* were given to poor minstrels on frequent occasions.

The first name upon the Roll in connexion with John of Brabant is that of Humfrey de Bohun (spelt "Anfridus de Boum"). Whether he was the third Earl of Hereford of this noble family, or his son, there is nothing to shew. He and John of Brabant were together for some weeks. A John de Diuz or Duz and his brother Theobald seem also to have visited and stayed with John of Brabant, as there is an account of expenses for Theobald's lying ill at Northampton.*

There are three notices of horses presented to individuals, obviously foreigners: to Golard de Moy a trotting-horse ("run-cinus") was given in the fields at Dunstable, costing 40*s.*;† and two horses were also bought and given there to John de Barr (brother of Henry Earl of Barr, then courting the princess Eleanor), and to Sir Golard Dermoises, by Thomas and Henry, at a cost of 60*s.*‡ The two "Golards" were doubtless but one person. Geoffrey de Langley appears as a companion of Thomas and Henry.§ He was a knight holding lands in the counties of Warwick, Gloucester, and Oxford. The most important public business upon which he seems to have been engaged is that which is shewn by the evidence of a most interesting document lately discovered in the Chapter House.¶ At some period, not, it is presumed, very distant from the date of the Roll of John of Brabant, he was sent as Ambassador from Edward I. to the Moghul Sovereign, for the purpose of forming an alliance against the Sultan of Babylon.

The following Roll is printed from the original in the Chapter House, Westminster, which now represents the office of the Treasurer of the Receipt of the Exchequer. Into the custody of that ancient department the treaties and other diplomatic documents, together with the Accounts of the Expenditure of the Court and Sovereign, were regularly consigned; and the originals of the instruments printed in the "Fœdera" relating to the transactions with the Duke of Brabant are still there. An entry in one of the ancient calendars of the office shews that they were, at the time of deposit, placed in a "leathern forcer bound with iron," distinguished by the "sign" of a banner displaying the Brabant lion.*

The Members of the Camden Society are aware that a different name from that with which these remarks are signed was to have appeared to this Introduction. The Roll of John of Brabant was brought by me to the notice of the late Mr. T. H. Turner some few years ago, from a feeling, which I entertained in common with many others, that, standing as he did in the foremost rank of those who have made deep researches into mediæval history and customs, he was best able to illustrate such a document. To him indeed we looked in the hope of obtaining a far more valuable, copious, and trustworthy picture of the condition of England during the middle ages than has ever yet been presented. That such an opinion was well founded, his various essays, and more especially his "Account of Domestic Architecture," amply shew. Some few extracts from the Roll, prefaced by introductory remarks, were read by him at the monthly meeting of the Archæological Institute on 3rd March, 1848. I have, however, been obliged to differ from some of those remarks, which I feel sure he would have repudiated upon mature consideration. Nothing but a wish to complete, as far as lies in my power, the understanding my deceased friend had entered into with the Council of the Camden Society, would have induced me to attempt a task which he intended to execute.

Page 1, line 2. Anfridi de Boum; Humfridi de Boum. It will be remarked that most of the proper names are spelt in a peculiar manner, the Flemish pronunciation having been followed.

Line 11. Gilkinum armatorem; afterwards "Egidius" (p. 7). In the Royal Wardrobe Account 18 Edward I. the following names of the Prince's attendants are given: Roger de Stalham, clerk of the household; Hancock, valet of the pantry and buttery; William, of the kitchen; Bride, of the chamber; Gosekin, tailor; Walter, barber; Agnes, laundress; Geoffrey, farrier; Francis and Forsekin, falconers; Gisekin and Franskin, sumptors (i.e. attendants to the sumpter horses); and Pennant and Cade, palfreymen. Several of these will be recognised in the following pages, with some variation in the spelling of their names.

Line 14. Rokeborch; Roxburgh.

Line 15. Gedeworde; Jedburgh.

P. 2, line 28. Dextrariorum; destriers or chargers. Besides these, the most important of the stud, the Prince's horses consisted of coursers (cursores), palfreys, and rownceys (pallfridi et runcini), and sumpter or pack horses (sommarii). Each class had its regular attendants.

P. 3, line 30. Tixutorum; cloths for covering the horses.

P. 4, line 10. Gheredon; Grendon, Bucks. Also written Croendon, Croindon, and Gerondon.

Line 26. Brochton; Broughton.

P. 5, line 17. Thenas; caps. "Et tenam suam de capite suo cepit, et in luto projecit."—Plac. Cor. Reg. 15 Edw. I. In the Promptorium Parvulorum, "Tena" is given as the gloss for "Huwyr," the name of a cap in the fifteenth century. On p. 8, line 1, is an entry of "xij. thenis," probably for presents.

Line 18. Barbitorem; barber.

Line 31. De Croroyis; Cruce Roesie; Royston, Herts.

P. 7, line 5. Bracalibus; gardebras, bracers. A protection for the left arm, often made of costly materials.

Line 26. Loricis et pileis; hauberks and basinets.

Line 29. Bulgis ad garderobam; leathern bags for the wardrobe.

P. 8, line 1. Waterkinum; Walter.

Line 25. Domini Emundi; Edmund first Earl of Lancaster, younger brother of the King, and father of the Thomas and Henry so often mentioned.

P. 9, lines 2 to 4. Columptantur, &c. This refers to the checking of the account, on the giving in of which it seems that some items were not satisfactory; against these crosses were put, and their amount was not to be paid till the opinion of the Treasurer (probably of the Royal Household) was taken upon them. The payments that follow shew that they were all discharged.

Line 10. Contra-rotulus expensarum, &c. Here commences the second membrane, which is not in the same hand, but is written by an English scribe. The entries relate only to the ordinary household expenses.

P. 10, line 4. Thoma, Henrico, &c. Membrane 3 begins here, written in the same foreign hand as the first.

Line 17. Lochboech. Loughborough, Leicester.

Line 25. Chastons, chastons or chausetons; breeches worn over mail armour. A diminutive of chausses.—Meyrick. In the roll of purchases for the tournament at Windsor, 6 Edw. I. is a payment for "lxxj. par' chaston."—Archæologia, xvii p. 297. See postea, p. 15.

Line 26. Tribus paribus fulerum; three pairs of studs or bosses for horse-gear.

Line 29. Borellis in hastiludio; blunt spears for a hastilude. In the thirteenth century a harmless kind of tournament was practised for acquiring address and proving strength, in which mock lances called "bouhoury," were used.—Meyrick, i. 125.

Kynelourde; Kenilworth?

Line 32. Peramenta; pouches or small bags.

P. 11, line 12. Kynemarsseowrle. Kenilworth, Herts?

Line 28. Wemelee; Wimley, Herts.

P. 12, line 3. Chelsoe; Chelsea?

Line 14. Rotulus expensarum, &c. Membrane 4. It is in the same hand as mem. 2.

Line 19. Tutlebers. Tutbury, Stafford.

Line 30. Merton; Morston, Bucks?

P. 13, line 7. Tele Dailisham. cloth of Aylesham, Norfolk.

Line 18. Corogis; girdles.

Line 27. Belabris; double-mouthed sacks, or, as it is expressed, "double lipped." See Du Cange, s. v. Bisaccia. A MS. 44 Edw. III. shews them to have been used for carrying treasure, and that they then had locks.

P. 14, line 26. Cindone. sindon, a kind of cloth.—See Du Cange, s. v.

Line 30. Testeria; testieres, head-pieces fixed on the horse's head between the ears, in which a crest was put.—Meyrick. See postea, p. 15. Piccia, a portion of horse-armour not assigned in Meyrick. In the Inventory of Louis le Hutin dated 1316, there printed, occur "Item, picieres et flanchieres de samit des armes le roy."

P. 15, line 1. Batturo; a metal composition, chiefly copper, used for ornamental purposes. It is a very early instance of its use. See article on "The use of Tin in Girdles," in Journal of Archaeological Institute, No. xxv. (October, 1852), p. 281.
